Bond-Holders Buy In Hyde Steel Mill For $1000--Only Bid

Future of Property Now In Hands of Local Capitalists--Second Mortgage Holders Are Ousted

PLANS FOR FUTURE BEING DISCUSSED

The Hyde City steel mill, idle for several years past, was sold at public auction by the sheriff this afternoon on a foreclosure of first mortgage bonds amounting to $43,000. The plant went to the Clearfield Trust Company as trustee, on the only bid offered, $1000. George R. Bigler, attorney offered the bid.

This closes another chapter in the eventful history of the Hyde City plant, and gives possession to the holders of the first mortgage bonds. Holders of $108,000 in second mortgage bonds lose their equity in the property, and were not represented at the sale today.

The most important feature of the sale is that it places the first mortgage holders, a majority of whom are Clearfield capitalists, in absolute control of the plant, and gives them authority to negotiate for its disposal or rehabilitation, propositions for both of which dispositions are reported to be now in the hands of the trustees.

In the mix-up between the bond-holders and the Newhall Engineering company, of Philadelphia, mortgagees several splendid opportunities for re-opening the plant have been missed, local men interested in it being unable to gain the approval of the Newhall people to any proposition offered. Since the outbreak of the war there have been any number of inquiries concerning the property and its availability for the manufacture of war supplies, but none of these have resulted in any move which indicated resumption of the plant.

Charles Hyde, of Pittsburgh, founder of Hyde City, and builder of the original steel plant, was present at the sale today. Mr. Hyde is interested in the first mortgage bonds. With him was J. C. Parsons, also of Pittsburgh, a lumberman and banker.

Pearl T. Davis, treasurer of the Trust Company, stated in an interview this afternoon that the future of the plant was uncertain. "It is important, however," said Mr. Davis, "that the property is now in the hands of the bond-holders under clear title, and that their authority to dispose or it cannot be interfered with by other interests."

Immediately following the sale a conference between the group of men most heavily interested in the property took place. At this meeting were A. W. Lee, John Wrigley, Chas. Hyde, the attorneys for the Trust Company and others. No information concerning the meeting was available this afternoon. That some tangible plan for the future of the property is underway is admitted, however, details of which will be announced when the new owners complete the details of it.

OBREGON REACHES JUAREZ WITH BIG ESCORT OF TROOPS

Mexican Generals will Hold Conference with Funston and Scott Tomorrow

Large Crowd of Mexicans at Station But Little Cheering was Done—Pershing and Funston are Expected Tomorrow.

BY E. T. CONKLE
(United Press Staff Correspondent)

El Paso, April 28.—Generals Obregon and Trevina arrived in Juarez today with a big escort of Carranza troops coming by special train for the conference with Generals Scott and Funston.

All Juarez turned out to welcome General Obregon and his glittering staff on their arrival at nine a. m. With Obregon were 200 of the finest Mexican soldiers seen in Juarez in years, his personal body guard. Troops lined the streets and military bands played Mexican national airs. Accompanying Obregon were General Trevino, commander of the northern division of Carranza's army, General Luis Guiterrez, commandant at Chihuahua, Jose Herrera, Mayor of Parral, and numerous minor officials of the de facto government. Obregon was not in his full regalia. He wore a dark gray belted military coat. The other officers wore full dress uniforms, trimmed with much gold braid, making a glittering appearance.

There was little cheering from the Mexican crowds, many of them present from mere curiosity. General Gavira commander at Juarez and Carranza Consul Garcia greeted Obregon at the railroad station embracing after the Mexican fashion.

From remarks dropped by members of the Obregon staff it was learned that Generals Scott, Pershing and Funston were expected to be here. They expressed surprise when told that Pershing was at Maniquipa military headquarters in charge of the American troops. They thought Colonel Dodd was in command of the expedition. "You can see how straight we get news in Mexico City," one officer laughingly said.

Obregon was easily recognized as he passed through the ranks. His right arm has been cut off at the elbow at the battle of Calaya nearly two years ago.

The Obregon party was driven in automobiles to the Juarez customs house where a formal reception was held. Several moving picture camera men followed the movements enroute to Juarez from Chihuahua. Obregon's train was preceded by a pilot engine and troop train, his body guard, to forestall any attempt to wreck the train. General Gavira denied reports that Juarez was full of Villa sympathizers.

Miss Evelyn Smith Is Hostess At Dance For Younger Social Set

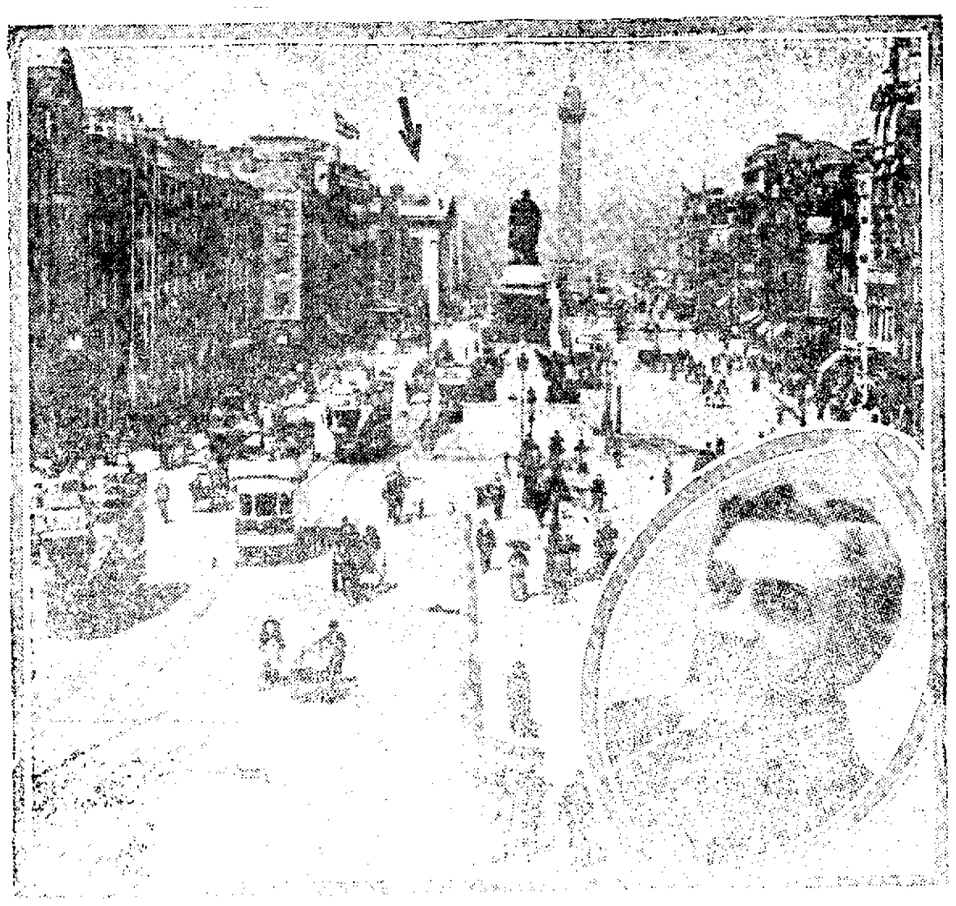
At a beautifully appointed dance last evening in the Susquehanna College of Music hall, Miss Evelyn Smith of Locust street, entertained the younger social set of Clearfield. The function was the largest of its kind given for the younger set this year.

Following the grand march led by the hostess and her cousin, David McCullough the guests made out programs for the dance, the chief entertainment of the evening. The dancing programs were composed of eighteen dances, consisting of one steps and fox trots. Excellent music for the dancing was furnished by the Knight and Smith two piece orchestra.

More than twenty couples of dancers and card players contributed to the scene of rare animation and gaiety.

At eleven o'clock there was an intermission during which delicious refreshments were served. The color scheme was beautifully and artistically worked out in green and pink. Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Staver and Mrs. Carrie Smith, mother of the hostess, acted as chaperons.

Dublin Postoffice Siezed by Rebels, and Irish Plotter



Sir Roger Casement

The postoffice in Dublin, indicated by the arrow, was seized by a mob. The picture shows a scene on O'Connell street, with the statue of Daniel O'Connell. Sir Roger Casement, on whose head the British placed a reward of $25,000 was caught off the Irish coast as he tried to land with Germans from a German ship. The outbreak of the Dublin mob, coincident with his capture, was evidently a part of his plan. The photograph of him was taken while he was at dinner in Munich with St. John Gaffney, American consul there, who came back recently.

MINERS TO PASS JUDGMENT ON THE NEW 1916 WAGE SCALE

Referendum Vote Now Being Taken, Which Will Be Completed on May 8.

The new scale adopted by the miners and operators at the recent Philadelphia convention is now being referred to the workers of District No. 2, under the referendum rule of the U. M. W. The returns will be sent in to the district office on or before May 8, when it will be determined whether or not the men sanction the action of their committee in accepting the wage scale finally adopted at Philadelphia.

Local leaders and officials of the Operators Association, are certain that the miners will agree to the new scale, as it is the most favorable one to them adopted in many years. The men were particularly anxious for the adoption of some of the demands which were either turned down or modified, but the concessions granted by the operators are considered sufficient to enlist their support in the referendum.

When the referendum result is published, the district will finally settle down to a two year period of peace.

THE BATTLE CRY OF PEACE

will be at the Globe theatre on May 1st, and May 2nd. This is no doubt the greatest spectacular moving picture booked for Clearfield. Those wishing to see the show should buy their tickets in advance. By doing so you can be sure of a seat at what ever show you wish to attend. You will surely miss seeing the show unless you buy your ticket before Saturday.

THE ARMED MERCHANTMEN.

Just why the State Department made public at this time the Memorandum on armed merchantmen dated March 25 is a matter of pure surmise. The theory that it is intended to influence the decision of Germany upon the momentous issue now pending is plausible enough, but only one rather obscure section justifies the assumption that anything less than complete submission to the demand for the abandonment of submarine warfare would be accepted. In the main the Memorandum is a mere statement of admitted principles of international law. To that extent it is an explicit denial of the German contention. Much has been said, for example, of "attempts to escape" as justifying attacks without regard to the safety of those on board, and when the State Department apparently accepted this limitation in the so-called Arabic pledge. Now it is pointed out that a merchantman intercepted by a belligerent warship "may exercise its right of self-protection either by flight or by resistance," and that it may further exercise this right "when certain of attack,' 'since otherwise it could not exercise it effectually. In other words, the contention that the mere approach of a submarine is sufficient evidence of hostile intent is allowed in the face of the German protest.

All this is really too plain to be disputed. But the memorandum goes on to draw a distinction between the neutral and belligerent attitude as to the armed merchantmen which is somewhat in the nature of an obiter dictum. "A neutral Government," we are told, "may proceed upon the presumption that an armed merchant vessel of belligerent nationality is armed for aggression while a belligerent should proceed on the presumption that the vessel is armed for protection." Why? It is admitted that only secondary or collateral evidence is required in the first case, because the fact to be established is negative, while primary and direct evidence is required in the second case, because the fact to be established is positive. If this be so the presumption should in all reason be the same in both cases. That is to say, if it be an unquestioned right of the merchantmen to arm for defense—and this is not disputed—then it is an obvious conclusion that the burden of proof that she is armed for offense rests upon whichever makes the accusation, neutral or belligerent. There is similar obscurity in the assertion that a ship "engaged intermittently in commerce," but occasionally used in the naval service, has a status as a warship which it "cannot throw aside or assume at will." This is apparently a gloss upon Article VIII of the Hague Convention of 1907, which says that "a vessel converted into a ship of war retains its character to the end of the war." Does the State Department mean to apply this principle to a vessel which has been used, say, as a transport and then returned to the merchant service?

Whatever conclusion may be reached on this point, the warning with which the Memorandum concludes, to the effect that Americans travelling on a vessel of this character "cannot expect immunity other than that accorded persons who are on board a warship," does not in any respect qualify their right to travel on a merchantman armed for defense, and is, therefore, in no apparent sense a concession to the German claim. The Administration could not in honor thus retreat from a position it has so definitely taken. For this reason it is difficult to see how the warning has any bearing on the present controversy with Germany, still less that it implies an abandonment of the plain demand made in the last note to Berlin.—Public Ledger.

Railroads Would Save Millions by Refusing to Grant Many Rebates

Cleveland, April 28.—In a statement issued today by the Railroad Transportation Brotherhood, attention was directed to the practice of railroads in granting rebates to shippers, hauling private cars, etc.

If the railroads are really sincere in desiring to conserve their revenue, a recent report of the Interstate Commerce Commission, shows the roads how they would save millions of dollars which they lose through practice of hauling private cars and the granting of rebates.

This is important in connection with the highly exaggerated estimates which the railways are handing out to the public as to the cost to carriers of the adoption of the eight-hour work day in freight train service.

It is commonly supposed that the practice of rebating has been brought to an end, but the records of fines imposed upon the railroads show that this unlawful practice has not yet been put a stop to. Not only do the railroads lose revenue by granting rebates but the fines which are imposed by the courts when rebate cases are detected are very considerable. It is reasonable to suppose that only a small percentage of the actual rebating is discovered by the authorities.

These cases of rebating and unlawful concessions and discriminations are not confined to any particular section of the country or to any special group of railroads. The practices are quite general among different railroads and in different sections. In 1915 the fines imposed upon the carriers amounted to $234,000, the following railroads being convicted by the courts: Central Railroad of New Jersey; Chicago, Terre Haute & Southeastern; Grand Trunk; Louisville & Nashville, Michigan Central; Missouri; Kansas & Texas and the Sierra Railway.

SOTHERN'S FAREWELL ENGAGEMENT

New York, April 28.—Seldom in recent years has any event in dramatic circles aroused more interest among patrons of the drama than the farewell engagement of E. H. Sothern, which is to begin tomorrow night at the Shubert Theatre in this city. Mr. Sothern, who long has been regarded as one of the foremost actors of the American stage, will appear for two weeks in his greatest success Justin Huntly McCarthy's "If I Were A King," for the benefit of the Actors' Fund and then will retire to private life.

FOR COURT TENNIS TITLE

New York, April 28.—The Racquet and Tennis Club in this city will be the center of interest tomorrow for all devotees of racquet sports. The occasion will be a court tennis match between Walter A. Kinsella, the American professional court tennis champion, and "Punch" Fairs, onetime holder of the world's championship. The match will be the best three sets out of five for a $500 purse and a side bet. Jay Gould, the national amateur champion, will referee the contests.

LADIES! DARKEN YOUR GRAY HAIR

Use Grandma's Sage Tea and Sulphur Recipe and Nobody Will Know

The use of Sage and Sulphur for restoring faded, gray and streaked hair is extremely popular. Nearly everybody knows that Sage and Sulphur darkens the hair evenly and naturally, so that no one can possibly tell it has been applied. Just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, it becomes beautifully dark and glossy.

Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur comes in convenient bottles, ready for use, for those who do not care to mix their own preparations. It is not intended to cure any disease, and of course does not pretend to do so.

Expert Advice For the Automobile Owner

Queries and Replies Covering Matters of Importance to the Man Who Runs a Car

Is it advisable when going down small grades or turning corners to throw out the clutch and let the car coast, or would the added wear on the clutch offset any benefit to the differential? My car has a cone clutch.

Excessively frequent engagement and disengagement of a cone clutch naturally increases the wear on the facing and operating parts, proportionately impairing their condition. It is very improbable that any possible degree of wear on the differential which would be avoided by throwing out the clutch and letting the car coast down small grades or around corners would be sufficiently great to compensate for the increased effort to the driver and the greater rapidity of wear on the clutch facing and linkage resulting from making this constant practice.

Is there more danger of fire from placing the gasoline tank in the coil than if located a greater distance from the engine?

No, because the tank is sufficiently remote from the ignition.

If one or two lifting rods on the intake valves of a six cylinder car are too tight or too loose, is there much loss of power? If so, would this be more noticeable in starting than in regular running? Would it have the same effect on the exhaust side, and why?

When the car leaves the factory the lifting rods and valve stems are adjusted so that the clearance between them is only sufficient to allow for expansion of the metal caused by the heating of the engine when running. As a rule there is only the thickness of a visiting card allowed for this clearance. Naturally the motor operates best with this clearance, and when one or more of the lifting rods are too tight or too loose the power output of the engine is diminished. If the rod on the intake side is too loose the valve remains closed for too long a period and is likely to stick. In either case the amount of the incoming charge of gas is cut down so that the explosion in the cylinder is much weaker than would be the case if the valve clearance were correct. If the rod is too tight the valve cannot close properly, and as a result the incoming charge of gas is not properly injected into the combustion chamber, and when compression and explosion take place the partly open valve makes a bad leak, which, of course, greatly reduces the power of the cylinder. Conditions such as these make starting more difficult, and their effect on the engine is more noticeable at this time than when running. If the lifting rods on the exhaust side are too loose the valves remain closed too long and prevent the scavenging stroke of the motor from driving all the burned gas out of the combustion chamber to leave it ready for the incoming charge of fresh gas. An exhaust valve is also more likely to stick if too loose than if its clearance were only the correct amount. If the lifting rods on the exhaust side are too tight the same conditions obtain as on the intake side. The valve cannot close properly, and it is impossible to secure perfect compression, which is requisite for the development of maximum power. The results of the lifting rods having incorrect clearance on either side are the same in all motors, whether of two, four, six, eight or twelve cylinders, though, of course, the effects would be more apparent in the engines with fewer cylinders.

Will a six volt starting and lighting battery give as brilliant a light with fifteen candle power bulbs as a lighting system operated through a battery from a generator driven by the engine, the same fifteen candle power bulbs being used?

Though a six volt starting and lighting battery will give practically as brilliant a light as a generator system for a short time the intensity of the light will naturally decrease in proportion to the amount of service which the battery is called upon to perform. On the other hand, with a generator system the battery is constantly being recharged and the lights are maintained at maximum brilliancy.

What is the average size, in cubic contents, of the combustion chamber of an internal combustion engine with relation to its horsepower?

The displacement of the motor is no exact measure of its power. As usually figured, it requires 8.5 cubic inches per horsepower at 1,000 r. p. m.

I have had trouble with my generator. The ammeter shows only a slight current. After I clean off the commutator with sandpaper it works well for a short time, but very soon the old trouble returns. What is the matter?

The difficulty is probably due to a rough commutator. Cleaning with sandpaper, while it cleans the bars of the commutator well leave the mica high, with the result that the brushes make imperfect contact and the commutator bars soon burn black. The only way to correct this trouble is to remove the armature and have the commutator turned down in a lathe. There is also a possibility that the brushes which you are using are too soft.

How does horsepower, as applied in mechanics, compare with the horsepower of a horse? In other words, how do they measure horsepower?

The rate at which an engine does work is often given as a number of horsepower, one horsepower being work done at the rate of thirty-three foot pounds per minute, supposed to represent the maximum rate at which work could be done by a horse. Work done by an engine may mean either of two things, namely, the total work done by the engine, or the effective work done by the engine. Both kinds of work are obtained by calculation. The total work is called the indicated horsepower. The useful or effective work is that which remains of the total work after a deduction has been made of the work necessary to overcome the frictional resistance due to bearings and other working parts. This useful work is called brake horsepower.

In measuring the indicated horsepower of a motor there are several factors to be considered: pressure on the piston in pounds per square inch, the area of the piston in square inches, the stroke in feet and number of strokes per minute. The product of these divided by 33,000 will give the indicated horsepower.

I have a friend who cleans carbon out with salt. He runs his engine two or three minutes to warm up, then removes the spark plugs and puts one and one-half normal salt tablets in each cylinder and then runs the car about fifteen miles. By that time there is no carbon remaining in engine or valves. Will the chemical action set up by the salt and heat do any damage to the cylinders?

While salt will burn off the carbon by chemical action due to the combination of salt and carbon into sodium carbonate, it is very likely that the combination of chlorine with the hydrogen in gasoline would form hydrochloric acid, which would tend to have an intense rusting action on the cylinders.

An unpleasant sound issues from the rear wheels of my car when traveling over twenty miles per hour, and I have found that there is a little play in one of the rear wheels. By play, I mean that when rear wheel is jacked it can be pushed in and out about one-eighth or one-fourth inch. The trouble I am sure is not beneath the hub cap, as I had tightened this nut, and I think that the differential itself must be adjusted. How can I adjust it so as to stop this ringing, grinding noise? Also, when taking off the cover of the differential I have found that the edges of teeth of the large gear have been chipped.

The lost motion in the rear axle appears to be due to worn thrust bearings. If the car will be examined by a competent mechanic it is quite certain to be noted that the differential thrust bearings are badly worn and need replacing.

This same noise may possibly be assigned to the noise about which you speak, although this may also be attributed to the condition of the pinion gears and pinion. The clutch should be examined at the same time that the thrust bearings are replaced and the differential overhauled.

After a motor is loosened from running the amount of oil required is considerably less than when the motor is new. For ordinary driving we recommend that the adjusting screw at the bottom of the pump be closed entirely and then opened three quarters or seven eighths of a turn. Of course if you undertake long trips or run the car under unusual conditions, such as through heavy mud and sand, more oil will be required and the adjusting screw should be opened accordingly.

HIS OWN STORY HOLDS A THRILL FOR THOUSANDS

Well-Known Pittsburgher is Qualified To Speak for Multitude

The story told by L. C. Byer, of 847 Penn Street, a well-known Pittsburgh shoemaker, will strike home to many thousands of men and women in this city and its suburbs. It is a story that might have been spoken for hundreds of thousands of others, but it is Mr. Byer's statement:

"I had a severe spell of dizziness, and weakness, because of the excessive use of tobacco to my mouth and throat, which I eventually swallowed in small part. The dizzy spells affected my stomach. I would vomit four or five times a night because of the dizziness and nausea. Finally my kidneys got out of order.

"When I started to use Doan's Kidney Pills I had no faith, but after a friend told me I was making a mistake if I quit on Doan's I decided to try them. I have used them off and on for about two months and they have done me more good than anything I ever took. They have relieved me of my dizziness and nausea. They have made my kidneys normal again. They have made me feel like a new man. They have made me strong and healthy. They have made me feel like working. They have made me feel like living. They have made me feel like a man. They have made me feel like a man. They have made me feel like a man

SOFT COAL STRIKE ENDS.

New York, April 28.—The differences between the bituminous miners of District No. 5 in Pennsylvania and their employers, over the interpretation of the contract drawn up at the soft coal conference here last February, were settled here today, and the miners will go back to work tomorrow. This was announced after a conference between John P. White, president of the United Mine Workers of America and W. K. Fields, representing the Pittsburgh Coal Company and operators.

About 24,000 miners in the district have been on strike to enforce the terms of the contract, which includes a 5 per cent. increase in wages. This increase they now will receive, it was reported.

Bond-Holders Buy In Hyde Steel Mill For $1000--Only Bid

Future of Property Now In Hands of Local Capitalists--Second Mortgage Holders Are Ousted

PLANS FOR FUTURE BEING DISCUSSED

The Hyde City steel mill, idle for several years past, was sold at public auction by the sheriff this afternoon on a foreclosure of first mortgage bonds amounting to $43,000. The plant went to the Clearfield Trust Company as trustee, on the only bid offered, $1000. George R. Bigler, attorney offered the bid.

This closes another chapter in the eventful history of the Hyde City plant, and gives possession to the holders of the first mortgage bonds. Holders of $108,000 in second mortgage bonds lose their equity in the property, and were not represented at the sale today.

The most important feature of the sale is that it places the first mortgage holders, a majority of whom are Clearfield capitalists, in absolute control of the plant, and gives them authority to negotiate for its disposal or rehabilitation, propositions for both of which dispositions are reported to be now in the hands of the trustees.

In the mix-up between the bond-holders and the Newhall Engineering company, of Philadelphia, mortgagees several splendid opportunities for re-opening the plant have been missed, local men interested in it being unable to gain the approval of the Newhall people to any proposition offered. Since the outbreak of the war there have been any number of inquiries concerning the property and its availability for the manufacture of war supplies, but none of these have resulted in any move which indicated resumption of the plant.

Charles Hyde, of Pittsburgh, founder of Hyde City, and builder of the original steel plant, was present at the sale today. Mr. Hyde is interested in the first mortgage bonds. With him was J. C. Parsons, also of Pittsburgh, a lumberman and banker.

Pearl T. Davis, treasurer of the Trust Company, stated in an interview this afternoon that the future of the plant was uncertain. "It is important, however," said Mr. Davis, "that the property is now in the hands of the bond-holders under clear title, and that their authority to dispose or it cannot be interfered with by other interests."

Immediately following the sale a conference between the group of men most heavily interested in the property took place. At this meeting were A. W. Lee, John Wrigley, Chas. Hyde, the attorneys for the Trust Company and others. No information concerning the meeting was available this afternoon. That some tangible plan for the future of the property is underway is admitted, however, details of which will be announced when the new owners complete the details of it.

OBREGON REACHES JUAREZ WITH BIG ESCORT OF TROOPS

Mexican Generals will Hold Conference with Funston and Scott Tomorrow

Large Crowd of Mexicans at Station But Little Cheering was Done—Pershing and Funston are Expected Tomorrow.

BY E. T. CONKLE
(United Press Staff Correspondent)

El Paso, April 28.—Generals Obregon and Trevina arrived in Juarez today with a big escort of Carranza troops coming by special train for the conference with Generals Scott and Funston.

All Juarez turned out to welcome General Obregon and his glittering staff on their arrival at nine a. m. With Obregon were 200 of the finest Mexican soldiers seen in Juarez in years, his personal body guard. Troops lined the streets and military bands played Mexican national airs. Accompanying Obregon were General Trevino, commander of the northern division of Carranza's army, General Luis Guiterrez, commandant at Chihuahua, Jose Herrera, Mayor of Parral, and numerous minor officials of the de facto government. Obregon was not in his full regalia. He wore a dark gray belted military coat. The other officers wore full dress uniforms, trimmed with much gold braid, making a glittering appearance.

There was little cheering from the Mexican crowds, many of them present from mere curiosity. General Gavira commander at Juarez and Carranza Consul Garcia greeted Obregon at the railroad station embracing after the Mexican fashion.

From remarks dropped by members of the Obregon staff it was learned that Generals Scott, Pershing and Funston were expected to be here. They expressed surprise when told that Pershing was at Maniquipa military headquarters in charge of the American troops. They thought Colonel Dodd was in command of the expedition. "You can see how straight we get news in Mexico City," one officer laughingly said.

Obregon was easily recognized as he passed through the ranks. His right arm has been cut off at the elbow at the battle of Calaya nearly two years ago.

The Obregon party was driven in automobiles to the Juarez customs house where a formal reception was held. Several moving picture camera men followed the movements enroute to Juarez from Chihuahua. Obregon's train was preceded by a pilot engine and troop train, his body guard, to forestall any attempt to wreck the train. General Gavira denied reports that Juarez was full of Villa sympathizers.

Miss Evelyn Smith Is Hostess At Dance For Younger Social Set

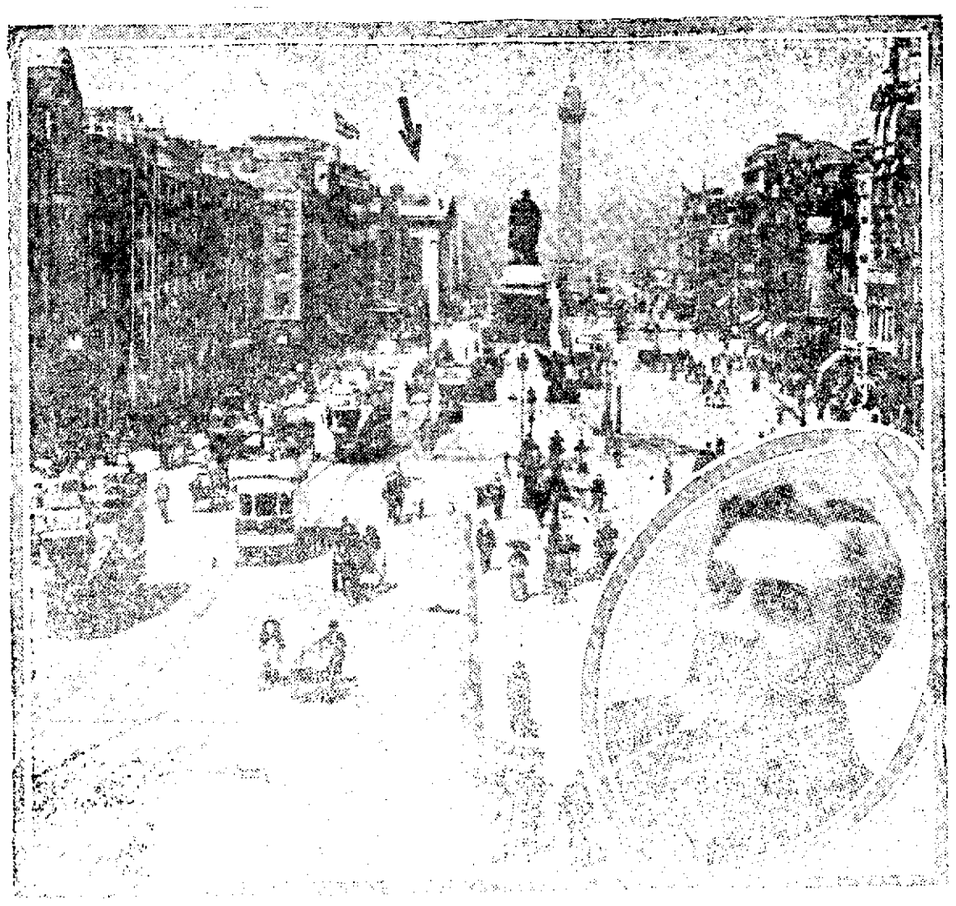
At a beautifully appointed dance last evening in the Susquehanna College of Music hall, Miss Evelyn Smith of Locust street, entertained the younger social set of Clearfield. The function was the largest of its kind given for the younger set this year.

Following the grand march led by the hostess and her cousin, David McCullough the guests made out programs for the dance, the chief entertainment of the evening. The dancing programs were composed of eighteen dances, consisting of one steps and fox trots. Excellent music for the dancing was furnished by the Knight and Smith two piece orchestra.

More than twenty couples of dancers and card players contributed to the scene of rare animation and gaiety.

At eleven o'clock there was an intermission during which delicious refreshments were served. The color scheme was beautifully and artistically worked out in green and pink. Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Staver and Mrs. Carrie Smith, mother of the hostess, acted as chaperons.

Dublin Postoffice Siezed by Rebels, and Irish Plotter



Sir Roger Casement

The postoffice in Dublin, indicated by the arrow, was seized by a mob. The picture shows a scene on O'Connell street, with the statue of Daniel O'Connell. Sir Roger Casement, on whose head the British placed a reward of $25,000 was caught off the Irish coast as he tried to land with Germans from a German ship. The outbreak of the Dublin mob, coincident with his capture, was evidently a part of his plan. The photograph of him was taken while he was at dinner in Munich with St. John Gaffney, American consul there, who came back recently.

MINERS TO PASS JUDGMENT ON THE NEW 1916 WAGE SCALE

Referendum Vote Now Being Taken, Which Will Be Completed on May 8.

The new scale adopted by the miners and operators at the recent Philadelphia convention is now being referred to the workers of District No. 2, under the referendum rule of the U. M. W. The returns will be sent in to the district office on or before May 8, when it will be determined whether or not the men sanction the action of their committee in accepting the wage scale finally adopted at Philadelphia.

Local leaders and officials of the Operators Association, are certain that the miners will agree to the new scale, as it is the most favorable one to them adopted in many years. The men were particularly anxious for the adoption of some of the demands which were either turned down or modified, but the concessions granted by the operators are considered sufficient to enlist their support in the referendum.

When the referendum result is published, the district will finally settle down to a two year period of peace.

THE BATTLE CRY OF PEACE

will be at the Globe theatre on May 1st, and May 2nd. This is no doubt the greatest spectacular moving picture booked for Clearfield. Those wishing to see the show should buy their tickets in advance. By doing so you can be sure of a seat at what ever show you wish to attend. You will surely miss seeing the show unless you buy your ticket before Saturday.

THE ARMED MERCHANTMEN.

Just why the State Department made public at this time the Memorandum on armed merchantmen dated March 25 is a matter of pure surmise. The theory that it is intended to influence the decision of Germany upon the momentous issue now pending is plausible enough, but only one rather obscure section justifies the assumption that anything less than complete submission to the demand for the abandonment of submarine warfare would be accepted. In the main the Memorandum is a mere statement of admitted principles of international law. To that extent it is an explicit denial of the German contention. Much has been said, for example, of "attempts to escape" as justifying attacks without regard to the safety of those on board, and when the State Department apparently accepted this limitation in the so-called Arabic pledge. Now it is pointed out that a merchantman intercepted by a belligerent warship "may exercise its right of self-protection either by flight or by resistance," and that it may further exercise this right "when certain of attack,' 'since otherwise it could not exercise it effectually. In other words, the contention that the mere approach of a submarine is sufficient evidence of hostile intent is allowed in the face of the German protest.

All this is really too plain to be disputed. But the memorandum goes on to draw a distinction between the neutral and belligerent attitude as to the armed merchantmen which is somewhat in the nature of an obiter dictum. "A neutral Government," we are told, "may proceed upon the presumption that an armed merchant vessel of belligerent nationality is armed for aggression while a belligerent should proceed on the presumption that the vessel is armed for protection." Why? It is admitted that only secondary or collateral evidence is required in the first case, because the fact to be established is negative, while primary and direct evidence is required in the second case, because the fact to be established is positive. If this be so the presumption should in all reason be the same in both cases. That is to say, if it be an unquestioned right of the merchantmen to arm for defense—and this is not disputed—then it is an obvious conclusion that the burden of proof that she is armed for offense rests upon whichever makes the accusation, neutral or belligerent. There is similar obscurity in the assertion that a ship "engaged intermittently in commerce," but occasionally used in the naval service, has a status as a warship which it "cannot throw aside or assume at will." This is apparently a gloss upon Article VIII of the Hague Convention of 1907, which says that "a vessel converted into a ship of war retains its character to the end of the war." Does the State Department mean to apply this principle to a vessel which has been used, say, as a transport and then returned to the merchant service?

Whatever conclusion may be reached on this point, the warning with which the Memorandum concludes, to the effect that Americans travelling on a vessel of this character "cannot expect immunity other than that accorded persons who are on board a warship," does not in any respect qualify their right to travel on a merchantman armed for defense, and is, therefore, in no apparent sense a concession to the German claim. The Administration could not in honor thus retreat from a position it has so definitely taken. For this reason it is difficult to see how the warning has any bearing on the present controversy with Germany, still less that it implies an abandonment of the plain demand made in the last note to Berlin.—Public Ledger.

WHY YOUR CORSET SHOULD BE A MODART

There are so many Corsets to choose from. Each lays claim to certain features.

But there is only one Corset that can claim the skill of Jennings in design. And Jennings is the world's foremost designer of front laced Corsets. He designs Modarts exclusively.

Jennings' fame as a designer is not entirely based on his style-creative skill. He has made a study of anatomy in its relatio nto proper corseting. His work must not only meet fashion requirements, but also the approval of the expert anatomist. He designs Modarts to improve your figure and promote your health.

There are a number of principles that enter into the making of a Corset. The human body is a continuous succession of curves, and upon the proper understanding of the relation of these curves to each other depends to a large degree the success of the Corset designer.

Railroads Would Save Millions by Refusing to Grant Many Rebates

Cleveland, April 28.—In a statement issued today by the Railroad Transportation Brotherhood, attention was directed to the practice of railroads in granting rebates to shippers, hauling private cars, etc.

If the railroads are really sincere in desiring to conserve their revenue, a recent report of the Interstate Commerce Commission, shows the roads how they would save millions of dollars which they lose through practice of hauling private cars and the granting of rebates.

This is important in connection with the highly exaggerated estimates which the railways are handing out to the public as to the cost to carriers of the adoption of the eight-hour work day in freight train service.

It is commonly supposed that the practice of rebating has been brought to an end, but the records of fines imposed upon the railroads show that this unlawful practice has not yet been put a stop to. Not only do the railroads lose revenue by granting rebates but the fines which are imposed by the courts when rebate cases are detected are very considerable. It is reasonable to suppose that only a small percentage of the actual rebating is discovered by the authorities.

These cases of rebating and unlawful concessions and discriminations are not confined to any particular section of the country or to any special group of railroads. The practices are quite general among different railroads and in different sections. In 1915 the fines imposed upon the carriers amounted to $234,000, the following railroads being convicted by the courts: Central Railroad of New Jersey; Chicago, Terre Haute & Southeastern; Grand Trunk; Louisville & Nashville, Michigan Central; Missouri; Kansas & Texas and the Sierra Railway.

SOTHERN'S FAREWELL ENGAGEMENT

Sothern, which is to begin tomorrow night at the Shubert Theatre in this city. FOR COURT TENNIS TITLE

New York, April 28.—The Racquet and Tennis Club in this city will be the center of interest tomorrow for all devotees of racquet sports. The occasion will be a court tennis match between Walter A. Kinsella, the American professional court tennis champion, and "Punch" Fairs, onetime holder of the world's championship. The match will be the best three sets out of five for a $500 purse and a side bet. Jay Gould, the national amateur champion, will referee the contests.

LADIES! DARKEN YOUR GRAY HAIR

Use Grandma's Sage Tea and Sulphur Recipe and Nobody Will Know

The use of Sage and Sulphur for restoring faded, gray hair is universal today because it is the best known remedy for this purpose. Sage and Sulphur darkens the hair so naturally and evenly that nobody can tell it has been applied. Just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strip at a time. By morning all gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark and glossy.

Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur comes in bottles, ready to use, for those who do not wish to make it themselves. It is not sticky or greasy, nor does it color the scalp. Adv.

Fashion Hints By Margaret Mason

"I love to show my mitt"
Says Miss Helen Hogan,
"The way I wear her mitted hands,
"Elbow length" is our slogan."

NEW YORK, April 28.—Yes, mitts are coming back and what ever else may be said of these delicate situations they are to be handled with gloves only knows.

Many of the old fashioned mitts, possibly it is only the name that is old look to our grandmothers to our hips and find that the mitted gauntlet is a part of the 1830 period and crinolined skirts.

New Yorker knows that the lace mitt on a hand is imperative. If your nails are not well kept, your knuckles pudgy will be discovered and your arms all sinewy sterling with the rich summer harvest of freckles that will now be theirs as they seem to wave from the beaches and fair.

Lace mitts are not the only notice for they also hide their light that will twinkle under the lace.

Pearls also are favorites in the form of gold, black and white pearls are exquisite.

Perfume will of course spoil the whole as an exponent of the delicate or harmonious innocence of the mitt. One ring on each finger is all that is permissible and the best taste for good taste in the choice of things.

Expert Advice For the Automobile Owner

Queries and Replies Covering Matters of Importance to the Man Who Runs a Car

Is it advisable when going down small grades or turning corners to throw out the clutch and let the car coast, or would the added wear on the clutch offset any benefit to the differential? My car has a cone clutch.

Excessively frequent engagement and disengagement of a cone clutch naturally increases the wear on the facing and operating parts, proportionately impairing their condition. It is very improbable that any possible degree of wear on the differential which would be avoided by throwing out the clutch and letting the car coast down small grades or around corners would be sufficiently great to compensate for the increased effort to the driver and the greater rapidity of wear on the clutch facing and linkage resulting from making this constant practice.

Is there more danger of fire from placing the gasoline tank in the coil than if located a greater distance from the engine?

No, because the tank is sufficiently remote from the ignition.

If one or two lifting rods on the intake valves of a six cylinder car are too tight or too loose, is there much loss of power? If so, would this be more noticeable in starting than in regular running? Would it have the same effect on the exhaust side, and why?

When the car leaves the factory the lifting rods and valve stems are adjusted so that the clearance between them is only sufficient to allow for expansion of the metal caused by the heating of the engine when running. As a rule there is only the thickness of a visiting card allowed for this clearance. Naturally the motor operates best with this clearance, and when one or more of the lifting rods are too tight or too loose the power output of the engine is diminished. If the rod on the intake side is too loose the valve remains closed for too long a period and is likely to stick. In either case the amount of the incoming charge of gas is cut down so that the explosion in the cylinder is much weaker than would be the case if the valve clearance were correct. If the rod is too tight the valve cannot close properly, and as a result the incoming charge of gas is not properly injected into the combustion chamber, and when compression and explosion take place the partly open valve makes a bad leak, which, of course, greatly reduces the power of the cylinder. Conditions such as these make starting more difficult, and their effect on the engine is more noticeable at this time than when running. If the lifting rods on the exhaust side are too loose the valves remain closed too long and prevent the scavenging stroke of the motor from driving all the burned gas out of the combustion chamber to leave it ready for the incoming charge of fresh gas. An exhaust valve is also more likely to stick if too loose than if its clearance were only the correct amount. If the lifting rods on the exhaust side are too tight the same conditions obtain as on the intake side. The valve cannot close properly, and it is impossible to secure perfect compression, which is requisite for the development of maximum power. The results of the lifting rods having incorrect clearance on either side are the same in all motors, whether of two, four, six, eight or twelve cylinders, though, of course, the effects would be more apparent in the engines with fewer cylinders.

Will a six volt starting and lighting battery give as brilliant a light with fifteen candle power bulbs as a lighting system operated through a battery from a generator driven by the engine, the same fifteen candle power bulbs being used?

Though a six volt starting and lighting battery will give practically as brilliant a light as a generator system for a short time the intensity of the light will naturally decrease in proportion to the amount of service which the battery is called upon to perform. On the other hand, with a generator system the battery is constantly being recharged and the lights are maintained at maximum brilliancy.

What is the average size, in cubic contents, of the combustion chamber of an internal combustion engine with relation to its horsepower?

The displacement of the motor is no exact measure of its power. As usually figured, it requires 8.5 cubic inches per horsepower at 1,000 r. p. m.

I have had trouble with my generator. The ammeter shows only a slight current. After I clean off the commutator with sandpaper it works well for a short time, but very soon the old trouble returns. What is the matter?

The difficulty is probably due to a rough commutator. Cleaning with sandpaper, while it cleans the bars of the commutator well leave the mica high, with the result that the brushes make imperfect contact and the commutator bars soon burn black. The only way to correct this trouble is to remove the armature and have the commutator turned down in a lathe. There is also a possibility that the brushes which you are using are too soft.

How does horsepower, as applied in mechanics, compare with the horsepower of a horse? In other words, how do they measure horsepower?

The rate at which an engine does work is often taken as a basis called a horsepower, one horsepower being work done at the rate of thirty-three foot pounds per minute, supposed to represent the maximum rate at which work could be done by a horse. Work done by an engine may mean either of two things, namely, the total work done by the engine, or the effective work done by the engine. Both kinds of work are obtained by calculation. The total work is called the indicated horsepower. The useful or effective work is that which remains of the total work after a deduction has been made of the work necessary to overcome the frictional resistance due to bearings and other working parts. This useful work is called brake horsepower.

In measuring the indicated horsepower of a motor there are several factors to be considered, pressure on the piston in pounds per square inch, the area of the piston in square inches, the stroke in feet and number of strokes per minute. The product of these divided by 33,000 will give the indicated horsepower.

I have a friend who cleans carbon out with salt. He runs his engine two or three minutes to warm up, then removes the spark plugs and puts one and one-half normal salt tablets in each cylinder and then runs the car about fifteen miles. By that time there is no carbon remaining in engine or valves. Will the chemical action set up by the salt and heat do any damage to the cylinders?

While salt will burn off the carbon by chemical action due to the combination of salt and carbon into sodium carbonate, it is very likely that the combination of chlorine with the hydrogen in gasoline would form hydrochloric acid, which would tend to have an intense rusting action on the cylinders.

An unpleasant sound issues from the rear wheels of my car when traveling over twenty miles per hour, and I have found that there is a little play in one of the rear wheels. By play, I mean that when rear wheel is jacked it can be pushed in and out about one-eighth or one-fourth inch. The trouble I am sure is not beneath the hub cap, as I had tightened this nut, and I think that the differential itself must be adjusted. How can I adjust it so as to stop this ringing, grinding noise? Also, when taking off the cover of the differential I have found that the edges of teeth of the large gear have been chipped.

The lost motion in the rear axle appears to be due to worn thrust bearings. If the car will be examined by a competent mechanic it is quite certain to be noted that the differential thrust bearings are badly worn and need replacing.

This same noise may possibly be assigned to the noise about which you speak, although this may also be attributed to the condition of the pinion gears and pinion. The clutch should be examined at the same time that the thrust bearings are replaced and the differential overhauled.

After a motor is loosened from running the amount of oil required is considerably less than when the motor is new. For ordinary driving we recommend that the adjusting screw at the bottom of the pump be closed entirely and then opened three quarters or seven eighths of a turn. Of course if you undertake long trips or run the car under unusual conditions, such as through heavy mud and sand, more oil will be required and the adjusting screw should be opened accordingly.

Well-Known Pittsburgher is Qualified To Speak for Multitude

The story told by L. C. Byer, of 847 Penn Street, a well-known Pittsburgh shoemaker, will strike home to many thousands of men and women in these days of his confidence it might have been suppressed for a matter of fear to all others there are legions who will recognize as kindred. Mr. Byer's statement:

"I had a severe spell of dizziness, and weakness, because of the excessive use of tobacco to my mouth and throat which I eventually swallowed in small part. The dizzy spells affected my eyesight. I would wear out or break glasses a night because of the dizziness. Finally my eyesight got so bad I could not work.

"The road system has been built up in 35 years, for while there was a line from Mexico City to the mouth of Guadalupe as early as 1850, it was not until 1880 that President Diaz inaugurated the first important line, that which runs from Vera Cruz to the National capital. President Diaz was opposed to the building of railways across the desert plateaus of northern Mexico for he believed, it is said, that these railroads afford a certain security against the political and commercial influence of the United States. President Porfirio Diaz had a far broader vision, however, and during his long regime railroad building was one of his chief concerns, so that when he retired from the presidency there stood ample evidence that he was a man of action as well as a dreamer.

"Although Mexico produces a large variety of coal it is of a poor grade and the railways use a low grade petroleum fuel. The Pan-American railway in Mexico is that 892 mile stretch of track which runs from the Arizona and Texas boundaries across the Federal District to Guatemala. It was here that Gen. Diaz dreamed of a ship railroad which could lift vessels by huge dredges from the harbor at Salina Cruz and convey them on trains which would transport them across the continent to Coatzacoalcos, where they would be lowered into the roadstead.

"The proposed Pan-American railway, being built by American capital, is expected some day to establish a direct, rail communication between New York City and Buenos Aires."
